

ONE OF OUR OWN

How Mrs. Leslie Considers the American as a Companion

HOSPITALITY SOUTH AND WEST

The Gentleman of Boston—The New Yorker—The Western Man—The Southerner—Charm of Each.

I HAVE been traveling of late in "our own, our native land," a course so loudly advocated by some of our compatriots that it is with a modest thrill of self-approval that I mention having just traversed many thousands of miles and seen almost every variety of scenery, all without once having deprived myself of the protection of Uncle Samuel's stars and stripes.

Of course I did not venture into Chili. That goes without saying!

But as this is not the first time by several that I have traversed the length and breadth of "my own, my native," and as on former occasions I have "done" all the peaks and pikes, the big trees, high mountains and deep valleys, the boiling springs and icy canyons, the Indians and the prairie dogs, the sage plains and foolish climbs, the Mormons, where seven women had one husband; and the convents, where seventy women have no husband at all; the Chinese quarter of Frisco, and the palace homes of that most inconsistent of cities whither one must carry one's entire wardrobe, including diaphanous textures for sultry mornings and sealskin coats for the afternoons of the same days; as I have, in fact, seen all that is to be seen of nature's handiwork in the best known portions of the states, I rather devoted myself upon this excursion to those human features of the scenery, which, like the mountains and the valleys, have a general resemblance to each other and yet vary each from each in some subtle yet essential manner.

"One star differeth from another star in glory," and yet stars have a decided family resemblance to each other; nobody would ever mistake a star for a lion or an eagle, for instance, and in most cases nobody would mistake an American for a Briton or a Teuton for a Frenchman. So, although all men are "bipedal without feathers" according to the cynical old philosopher, one man differeth from another man in glory, if glory it is, and, if, according to Mr. Pope, the "noblest study of mankind is man," it is not impossible that the dearest "study of" womankind lies in the same direction.

We have a big country, as we are rather fond of pointing out, especially to people who dwell upon a certain small island at the west of Europe, and one consequence of this extent of territory is that we have fellow citizens differing as much from ourselves in type as a loachman differs from an Italian.

Now in a journey from New York to California one is in the way of meeting "selected assortment" of all these differing types, and I did so, especially as my party, representing a press association, would naturally find interests and affinities everywhere that a newspaper printed or read, and I am safe to say that no cluster of five homes is to be found from Maine to California, or from Florida to Vancouver's, where the news of the world is not read and commented on with intelligent interest.

Of course persons who spend their lives in one absorbing pursuit are not going to quite throw aside its habits even when on an outing for rest and recreation, and I noticed with an indulgent smile that a good many of us almost involuntarily "interviewed" some of the others and made mental if not penciled notes for future use. Among the rest a very bright and talented man talking upon this subject of our cosmopolitan citizenship asked me, "Now which do you really prefer—the eastern, western or southern men?"

I laughed and told him that I was not young to help him out in his next "personal." But the question set me thinking and I looked about me a little, not only at our own party, but at those who met us en route.

One of ourselves was, as I should suppose, a typical Boston man, and of course all New Englanders are well content to be called Bostonians. This gentleman was slender and spare of figure, with clear cut features, intelligent, shrewd and cautious eyes, often hardening into severity; a thin lipped, passionless mouth and a pallid complexion. His manner was cold and somewhat reserved, but perfectly courteous and self-contained. He reminded me a little of Hamlet, who was not to be lightly moved by man, "nay, nor woman either," although some Horatio or Horatia might fancy so.

Just at first the Latin blood, which decidedly predominates over that of New England in my veins, was a little chilled by this gentleman's cold and speculative manner of regarding me; I felt somewhat as if I were a missionary and he a Timbuctooian considering which portion of my anatomy would make the best "dainty dish to set before the king." But as time went on I found that so far from intending to dissect and devour me, my Bostonian was most bourgeois about as much as touching the innermost fringe of my belongings, polioing with gravity and sincerity because in lowering a blind his hand had gained my arm. I feel quite sure that Sir Philip Sydney was a Bostonian by "intention," if not in fact. On the whole, I was very much pleased with this pronounced type of the gentleman of New England, and in all seriousness felt very sure that in any one of those accidents by fire or flood or other remarkable distress, when women are occasionally thrown upon the honorable protection of man, one could not be wiser of delicate and respectful treatment than at the hands of a Bostonian.

And yet—and yet—one wonders a little how he would go to work to disclose a tender passion or to rave against a rival. One might as easily imagine a company of big telebs having a jolly party over a good fire, and drinking each other's health in steaming rum punch. Of course we had several men of New York with us. It is to me a very familiar type of man, and yet I studied it with a fresh interest as contrasted with the rest.

The New Yorker carries in face and form and speech and action the fact that he lives in a very big city, and that competition, while it is the soul of trade, is very apt to be the death of the trader, whether his trade lies in brains or cotton. The New Yorker, if anything, is alert; he feels that it is his duty and his necessity to "catch on" to every new idea, every new promise or development, every new "chance" before the next man "gets there." One may be excused for describing him by slang, for he uses a great deal of it—those terse and pungent expressions which men invent to convey an idea not to be communicated by Johnsonian English. Parallel to this habit of slang is the New Yorker's love of abbreviation and minimization; he speaks of the ocean as "the pond," of the Atlantic as "the pond," of the country as "U. S.," of millions of dollars as "spot cash," of the electric telegraph as "the wire," and so on ad infinitum.

In brief, his habitual hurry leads him to discover the briefest form in which to convey his ideas, and his habitual irreverence and self-confidence lead him to speak lightly and, as it were, in a patronizing spirit of the biggest things in nature or humanity which he may chance to encounter. This habit of mind extends to the New Yorker's social manner and attitude. He is impatient of prolixity; he is incredulous of sentiment; he never forgets the practical side of his loveliness or his attentions. One New York man boldly avowed that he only gave his seat in the L. car to a pretty woman whom he might wish to know, to a woman of society at whose house he might wish to visit, or to an old woman who would speak well of him. Whether this was true or not it was eminently a New York cynicism.

But for all this cynicism, irreverence, rush and self-confidence, your New Yorker is a pleasant companion and a good comrade. He likes champagne, and under its genial influence expands into anecdote and jest, repartee and attack, nearly as sparkling as his favorite wine, although, like it, possessing more brilliancy than body. His prudence and wideawakeness tell him where to stop both the wine and the jest, and the latter, whether the party conducted by a New Yorker seldom bequeaths a headache or a regret to the next morning.

If I had an intellectual or moral difficulty to solve, I would consult a Boston man; if I required financial advice—not help, if you please—or if I were in a social puzzle of any sort, or wanted to know the character of any human being of note, I would ask it of a New York man; but if I had a hurt heart, or had done a foolish and imprudent thing and wanted to get out of it gracefully, I would scrupulously avoid telling either the one or the other, for the Bostonian would stonily stare his disapproval and the New Yorker would offer a jest or a cynicism, or show that my weakness had in his eyes broken down some of the barriers between himself and one who had not known how to guard himself from mistakes.

To whom would I turn in such a strait, you ask? Why, most assuredly to a southerner; aye, or to a westerner, diverse though they be. The southerner would understand me better and save much of the pain and humiliation of confessing the folly or the credulity that had led to the trouble we imagine; and the westerner would be even more ready to shield and comfort the sufferer.

Of course, on the excursion we allude to, we met many westerners, some of whom I had learned to know and to value in the course of my lecturing tour some two years since, and the sensation in renewing the acquaintance was as when, stepping from the heated and lifeless atmosphere of the drawing room car, one meets the first rush of the prairie wind—fresh, full of ozone, a little boisterous, yet full of sweet, wholesome scents of grass and wild growths and miles of unspoiled atmosphere.

There is no hospitality like that of the western man; the southerner is hospitable, but with discrimination; a joint antebellum distrust of a northerner lingers in his breast and his political likes and dislikes are rather apt to take a personal form. Also he likes to take something of his guest's family, social standing and antecedents. These matters pleasantly adjusted, the right man or woman may remain for months or years as guest in a southern home, and never perceive, because it would never exist, the slightest wonder on the part of his hosts as to when the visit would terminate.

But the westerner's hospitality is not handicapped by such, or by any, limitations; he receives whatever guest may come in his way, caring very little how or why he came, utterly indifferent as to his ancestry or family ties, very indulgent as to his social manners or habits, largely tolerant of his political or religious views, although they may diametrically oppose his own. He does not lay himself out as the southerner does to entertain his guest, or trouble himself to make him acquainted with other persons; he simply throws open the doors of his home and expects the guest to share its privileges without formality or protestations of gratitude. Only if this hospitality should be abused, and the warmed adobe begin to show his nature, then God pity the traitor, for I know not whether western rifle or southern pistol is the swifter or sterner avenger. What law and damage are to the east and to New York, gunpowder and steel are to the west and south.

But apart from hospitality, either the western or the southern man is a welcome and congenial companion—the former in a loud, jovial sort of fashion, the latter in a more refined and delicate style not seldom touched with a positive strain, easily lending itself to romance and sentiment.

The western man tells you a good deal about himself, his possessions, his pursuits, his agricultural or political propensities; he has very little reserve, and takes your interest and sympathy for granted with a naïveté which commonly evokes the feeling he appeals to.

The southerner, on the other hand, is a little silent and reserved about himself at first, but as the acquaintance ripens he talks to you about himself and shows such a real and cordial interest in anything you may choose to tell him as to often lead on to indiscreet confidences, and yet hardly indelicate, for the southern gentleman is the safest confidant in the world, except perhaps a Roman Catholic priest; and if his advice is not very practical or valuable, it is a good deal to be so heartily indulged and approved of, as you are sure to be by him. Now you ask, at the end as at the beginning, which manner of men do I like best? And I can only reply that each has his merits and his peculiarities, perhaps also his faults, or we will call them the defects of his virtues, and that with whichever I am thrown in contact I can spend a pleasant day, and be sure, if I am in need, of loyal and manly protection.

God bless the American man!
MRS. FRANK LESLIE.

The Skill and Knowledge
Essential to the production of the most perfect and popular laxative remedy known, have enabled the California Fig Syrup company to achieve a great success in the reputation of its remedy, Syrup of Figs, as it is conceded to be the universal laxative. For sale by all druggists.

"Royal Ruby" Port Wine.
The term "delicate health" is used to express a physical condition, in which the powers of nature appear to be partially exhausted, and the system is peculiarly sensitive to all morbid influences. Slight causes, which would produce no disturbance whatever in the body or mind of a robust individual, prostrate the strength and depress the spirits of persons in delicate health. Recourse should be had under these circumstances to "Royal Ruby" port wine. If there is any reserve of vitality in the enfeebled organization, this unequalled exhilarant and tonic will rouse and develop it. Quart bottles $1.00, pints 60 cents. Sold and guaranteed by White & White, Thum Bros., Schmidt, leading druggists. Bottled by Royal Ruby Wine Co., Chicago.

If you always insist upon having Allcock's Porous Plasters and never accept a substitute, you will not be disappointed.

Garfield Tea cures constipation, dyspepsia and sick headache; restores the complexion and saves doctor's bills.

Buckley's Arnica Salve.
The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles, or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Peck Bros., druggists, corner Monroe and Division sts.

Do not confuse the famous Bush of Roses with the many worthless paints, powders, creams and bleaches which are flooding the market. Get the genuine of White & White, 25 cents per bottle, and I guarantee it will remove your pimples, freckles, blackheads, moles, tan and sunburn, and give you a lovely complexion.

Peckham's Croup Remedy cures whooping cough.

Lily White.
The Valley City Milling Company has no peer in the manufacture of flour. Try the LILY WHITE.

For Over Fifty Years
Mrs. Winslow's Sore Throat has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, cures croup, whooping cough, colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Piled Piles Itching Piles.
SYMPTOMS: Moisture, intense itching and stinging; most at night; worse by scratching. If allowed to continue tumors form, which often bleed and ulcerate, becoming very sore. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT stops the itching and bleeding, heals ulceration, and in most cases removes the tumors. At druggists, or by mail, for 50 cents. Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia.
